Thus the furthest of of the 200 men who sit there on Saturday aftermons can look almost straight down on the sablect who is being operated upon. On the bottom of the kettie is the sale of the bettie is cut away the wall is white marbid on the kettie is cut away the wall is white marbid and in an alcove of it are the beautiful delicate, and instrous shelves and cases of glass where rost scores of instruments of polished steel and silver. All the fixed appointments in this alcove are of glass or marbid. Overhead is the double skylight. Hanging down of the marbid wall liangs a portable incan descent light at the end of a wire clothed with woven silk. On ton of the bails is a case of copper. The surgeon has this light close to his knife, and the copper shields its rays from his face and throws them all on the patient.

The chief surgeon arrives at about 3 o'clock svery afternoon. A bustle accompanies his soft stir without noise. A batlent in the ether room is being put to fleen, and surgeons, girl nurses, and attendants, all in spotless white, are seen is to his readiness and that of the operating room. The surgeon-in-chief enters the tolle from. It is unlike any other room of the sort outside of such a place. Along one wall is a sortes of marble wash basins, each noticath a hot and a cold water faucet. Standing side of the same place is a part of curved selssors in a leather case. They are flangersall scissors. Opposite the great washstand is series of an object the great washstand is a series of an object the great washstand in section of a lookers for the strong companies of his shirt and undershirt up above his naked arms, which are in his case the building. The head surgeon takes off his trousers and slips on a pair of heavy and thick trousers of linen duck, woven coursely but closely into a basket pattern. He rolls the serves of head of the surgeon's hands and wrists become raw looking, red as the meat of a looker's claw. "It is aligning pair in t and then grasping a handful of things he has thrown saide and plunging them all in the baths.

All the time that the operation lasted the surgeon with the bag of ether kept it over the patient's face. When the work was done the ether was taken away. In this country other is the favorite anaesthetic. In England chloroform is preferred. Ether can be more freely used a preferred. Ether can be more freely used the man's neck on which he had performed the wound, and then, with his own hands, washed the man's neck on which he had performed the operation. When it was clean and he had dried it with a towel or two, he bundled it up in snow-fresh lint and he and one of the nurses fastened the wrapping, here and there, with safety pins. Then an attendant wheeled in a very remarkable bed carriage that was as springy and easy as a palanquin. It had two big wheels under the middle and a pair of slightly smaller wheels on either end. By means of these it could to wheeled while slightly slanted or turned around a sharp corner on the middle wheels. Rubber tires on all the wheels made it noiseless. The able surgeon whose care and skill are manifest in every dearing that the was a sharp corner on the middle wheels. Rubber dires on such a bed carriage by way of an inclined plane that is covered with rubber for the wheels to run on, and has slats or foot pieces up the middle to give purchase to the feet of the men who pull the carriage to and fro. Every patient is sent from the surgeon's hands to a room on the upper floor of the operating theatre, and this man was wheeled noiselessly up to that floor, into a bedroom, and then into a bed. I saw that bedroom. Few rich men have more light and pleasant sleeping rooms and none have one so clean. The length of time that it will take for the healing of the wounds made in that man's neck will be incredibly short. Nothing foreign or irritating entered the cuts and they were closed with deep sutures and then, over them, with superficia of the floor. The only reason that this theatre is refer

Residents of Woodside village are opposed to an attempt of the Health Board of Long Island City to erect a pest house on the borders of their village. Yesterday Lawyer Edgar P. Foster obtained a writ from County Judge Garretson in Jamaica directing the health authorities of Long Island City to show building a pest house on the site selected. The writ is returnable in Brooklyn on next Wednesday. The pest house is in Skillman avenue and Heiser street, on the city line. It would have been ready for occupancy on Monday but for the interference of the Woodside None.
